Excerpt from Vicksburg National Military Park, Mississippi Covering an area of acres, the park, rugged and hilly in its topography, consists of two generally parallel ridges which surround the city of Vicksburg like a great crescent on the north, east, and south sides. The battlefield is traversed by two main roads: Confederate Avenue, which runs the length of the park along the Confederate or inner lines of fortifications; and Union Avenue, which follows along the greater portion of the Union or outer investment lines. Administered by the War Department until 1933, the park, with the adjoining cemetery, was at that time transferred to the National Park Service, United States Department of the Interior.
