Excerpt from How to Carve, and How to Serve a Dinner French cookery had necessitated a different instrument from our three-pronged fork. Ragouts and vegetable diet might be more readily eaten with a spoon, and probably a spoon split into four prongs was the first idea of a silver fork. In former days the office of Grand Carver was one of dignity in all households; but that was when animals were served up who e. That office, however, no longer exists for when the introduction of separate joints superseded the necessity of great bodily strength as well as dexterity in the carver, the host and hosts resumed the duty of assisting their guests at table. Then treatises were written on the art; and carving found its place amongst the accomplishments of polite life. Lord Chesterfield, the great teacher of the superficial polish necessitated by the artificial state of modern manners, makes the art of carving an object of paramount study to the finished man of the world. But in the middle ranks of life the modern science of carving is an accomplishment but too little studied before marriage, and consequently frequently never properly understood; and yet how much of the comfort of a household depends upon the master and mistress's knowledge of this necessary art! Often a dinner is ruined - there is no other word to express the utter destruction of all comfort to the guests-by the ignorance of those who have to serve it out.
