One of the men turning quickly to the boy addresses him gruffly with the words, bee here, boy, we don t want any of your help; you had better run home to your Pa, for you know you are his petted sonny, and he may be worried about you wfTknow, fearing you might take a cold or soil that new coat he has talten so much pains to fit you up with.] {Boy.) Father sent me to help you feed the sheep. Can t I stay and help you ? I am not afraid to work. Do let me stay and help von. (One of the men sharply.) I tel! yon to leave. We don t want any of your father s pets hem A Bay leaves.) (Men hold conversation together.) DEGREESLee.) Say, Rube, do you know that the old man is making a fool of that pet boy of his? Tho idea of dressing him up in that fantastic coat, making him as proud as Lucifer. If this thing is allowed to go on, he will soon be too big for his clothes, and will think he iiVuol be lording it over us. I do think the old man thinks more of him than all of us put together. I tell you, we must nip this tiling right is the bud, or we shall have a master before we know it. Don t you remember how he told us the other day about a dream he had. in which he said: While...
