The Hulks of Forton Lake Gosport: The Forton Lake Archaeology Project 2006-2009 (Mixed media product)

By Mark Beattie-Edwards, Julie Satchell

British Archaeological Reports, United Kingdom, 2011. Mixed media product. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Nautical Archaeology Society (NAS) Monograph Series No. 3 This monograph is the result of four years work investigating the archaeology of Forton Lake in Gosport, Hampshire, England. Chapter 1 provides an introduction to the Forton Lake Archaeology Project and to the location of the lake. Chapter 2 details the archaeology and history of the area around Forton Lake. Chapter 3 concentrates on the implementation of the project, the archaeological methodologies employed and the ways in which skills training and public engagement opportunities were maximized. Chapter 4 catalogues the results of the surveys and excavations under the headings of transportation, ferries and lifeboats, fishing, military and unclassified remains. Finally, Chapter 5 discusses the project in the context of the development of intertidal hulk recording methods and management strategies for intertidal archaeological remains and makes recommendations for further study. The project has demonstrated that the remains of abandoned vessels are a part of our local and national heritage that deserve greater recognition, alongside wrecks in the marine zone and historic vessels whether still floating or in dry dock. There is a...
