Leadstart Publishing Pvt Ltd, India, 2012. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Kanchana lives in a brothel in some obscure corner of some obscure city. She happens to like a particular customer, but the customer doesn't know nor care about her. However, in him, she finds a perfect confidant. She now writes him letters concerning her condition, her suffering and her broken and unimportant feelings as well as her opinion on the world as she sees it from her small little brothel room window. She doesn't have the customer's address, but simply posts the letters without an address and thus they go nowhere and remain unread. This is far better according to her as it can afford her better privacy. The book deals with some of the key factors in the life of a prostitute: the emotional troubles, the social inferiority and the pangs of pride and conscience to which they are subjected. These factors are seen by Kanchana as positive and something good. She comes to love her despair and suffering, and also realises that her life would have been of no significance whatever without them. This sounds absurd until one has completely settled oneself with the philosophy of the book. The book wishes to portray that man, in his attempt to live life, wants to always find a place of importance among other people, and for this he will constantly try to justify his position to himself and to others. He is always guilty - human life involves supreme guilt and despair as Kierkegaard suggests, guilt of not being what one wants to be, of not being superior to the rest, of being lesser in one's own eyes, guilty of being crushed and considered worthless (in Kanchana...
