PING-KUA: A GIRL OF CATHAY (CLASSIC REPRINT) (PAPERBACK)

Forgotten Books, 2018. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Ping-Kua: A Girl of Cathay IF you go by wheelbarrow or mule-litter across country from the Grand Canal of China at chi-ning to the city of N ing-yang, as you draw near to the Old willows by the moat you will see the corner and south side of the city wall, gray in the evening light. Following the road around to the west you cross the moat on a stone bridge and enter the city through a great arched gateway in the wall. Note the huge iron-clad gates. They Open in the middle and swing back against the wall each morning and swing out every night when the drum calls, meeting in the middle, where they are securely fastened by strong bars of wood which reach away across, with their ends fixed in holes at either side of the arch. Just inside that massive gateway, one morning about twenty years ago, a baby was born. The mother had climbed to the very top of tai-shan where the Goddess Of Babies has her temple, knocked her head many times before her shrine and, while clouds of incense smoke ascended, had prayed most earnestly for a son. Then, stealing one of the boy-baby images from the shrine, she had carried it home and cared for it as if it were a real baby, believing the goddess would be pleased and answer her prayer. The whole family had hoped for a son, for girls are not counted as children in Chinese heathen homes. It was because of all this that the faces of grandmother and mother-in-law were dark with frowns and the mother wailed, Wo-pu-yao-ti hsia-jen, which being interpreted means, I don't want...
