Excerpt from Foreign Crops and Markets, Vol. 14: February 28, 1927 According to a report dated January 17 from the American commercial attache at The Hague, stocks of wheat in Europe remained small in spite of the heavy arrivals In the opinion of the same authority, the policy of Russia seems to indicate a tendency to give less attention to wheat exports to Western Europe. The Lloyd Triestino is now organizing a regular steam ship line, Trieste, Brindisi, Constantinople, Odessa, which the Soviet Republic is said to be supporting. Thus Italy, Austria, Bavaria, and southern Yugoslavia will come in closer contact With Russia, causing a smaller direct influence upon the European market of Russian grain, but a decline in the exports of transatlantic grain to the Balkans and Italy.
