Excerpt: .They have impressed no permanent character-type, like Mrs. Gamp, or Mulvaney, or even Ally Sloper, on the popular imagination. Was there ever in the world such a gigantic mass of effort, in the direction of literature and art, so hopelessly ephemeral and negligible in its results? Whether play-lover or turn-lover, the average reader will view Mr. Archer's article as unduly hostile to the music-hall. There was a time when art at the variety theatre consisted mainly in blatant vulgarity, alcoholic humour, and rancid sentiment, but that day has now passed, and at any well-conducted West-end hall little or nothing will be found in the performance to offend, and the art often displayed there is of a far higher order than the wearying jumble of weak dancing, inane songs, and twaddly dialogue too frequently placed upon the stage successfully under the name of...
