Excerpt from Strange Dwellings: Being a Description of the Habitations of Animals, Abridged From Homes Without Hands The object of this work is so fully given in the Title-page, that little more remains to be said in the Preface. Beginning with the simplest and most natural form of habitation, namely, a burrow in the ground, the work proceeds in the following order: - 2nd, those creatures that suspend their homes in the air; 3rd, those that are real builders, forming their domiciles of mud, stones, sticks, and similar materials; 4th, those which make their habitations beneath the surface of the water, whether salt or fresh; 5th, those that live socially in communities; 6th, those which are parasitic upon animals or plants; 7th, those which build on branches. The last chapter treats of miscellanea, or those habitations which could not be well classed in either of the preceding groups. In all these classes a definite order has been preserved, the Mammalia having precedence, and being followed in regular order by the other members of the group.
