Excerpt from Franklin, His Genius, Life, and Character: An Oration Delivered Before the N. Y. Typographical Society, on the Occasion of the Birthday of Franklin, at the Printers Festival, Held January 17, 1849 From being printer to the Assembly, Franklin rose to the office of its Clerk. He was afterwards appointed Postmaster. Of Philadelphia, the duties of which trust he performed to general satisfaction; and at length his fellow-citizens chose him to represent them in the Legislature. This office afforded him an appropriate and conspicuous field for the exercise of his great and brilliant talents. From this period, which was twenty six years before our Declaration of Independence, Franklin probably contributed more, by his wise and prudent counsels, and his public acts and writings, to prepare the people for that great event, than any other public man in our country. Time will not permit us to detail the many great and important measures originated by Franklin during his legislative career. We must not, however, omit to mention, that as, during the period when he was employed in his profession, performing manual labour, he found Opportunity to acquire the knowledge that afterwards gave him eminence as a statesman so also, while faithfully serving the state in many capacities.
