Probably no one will dispute the statement that the greatest problem before us as educators at this time is the moral development of the boys and girls in our schools to-day because they will be our citizens to-morrow; to develop the moral individual, who wills to be, himself, a strong member of the social whole; to give his best of physical and intellectual strength; in short, to lead the individual to his greatest good to himself and to his country. Considering conditions as they exist in America to-day, would it be the part of wisdom to immerse ourselves in our own affairs in order that others may attend to theirs ? Is there another country in which cooperation and interdependence play so great a part in the everyday life of all as in America? Great changes have come to us within comparatively few years. The homes of a generation ago, with their uplifting tendencies and moral protection, have been so changed by the inrush of foreigners to our land, by the great growth of our cities, by the substitution of the flat and apartment house for the home, and by the general change in the form of domestic life, that they have grown less and less responsible for the details of child training. In the rush and hurry of modern life, moral as well as intellectual culture has become more and more a part of the educator s duties. Culture, the result of training,...
