SPEECH OF HON. ROBERT MALLORY, OF KENTUCKY, ON THE CONFISCATION OF PROPERTY: DELIVERED IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, MAY 21, 1862 (CLASSIC REPRINT)*DOWNLOAD

Forgotten Books. Paperback. Condition: New. 20 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.0in. Excerpt from Speech of Hon. Robert Mallory, of Kentucky, on the Confiscation of Property: Delivered in the House of Representatives, May 21, 1862 I believe, at least I hope, that opinion is shared by few Representatives on this floor. I am not to be led into an argument based upon the supposition that such is the opinion and purpose of a large portion of the members of this House. I will merely protest against and denounce it; I shall assume that it is not, and in the few remarks which I shall submit, I will undertake to confine myself to the legitimate subject before the House, and discuss the confiscation bills reported by the select committee of seven. I cannot concur in the opinion expressed by many gentlemen for whom I entertain great respect, and whose legal opinions I have been taught to consider correct, that there is in the Constitution of the United States no inhibition on Congress to forfeit the estates of persons who have been guilty of the crime of treason and thereof convicted and attainted. I approach this subject with much diffidence. I do not profess to be so skilled and learned in intricate constitutional questions as many other members on this floor. I am a plain, blunt, man, and in that spirit approach every subject which I undertake to discuss. But I think there are great leading provisions of the Constitution of the United States so plain in their import that a wayfaring man, though a fool, cannot err in their construction and true interpretation. I consider that provision which applies to the subject of forfeiture for treason one of these. Unlike the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. Noell, I have been taught to believe...
