Oer Arnos vale the music floats; Such melody from brazen throats Came neer before, the people say. Laudamus te: We praise Thee, Lord! We join with willing heart and tongue The hymn, to the far sky outflung: Laudamus te: We praise Thee, Lord. Nos te laudamus Domine! Still peals abroad the joyous chime; So may they ring thro countless time Those wondrous bells, first rung to-day. A The chimes had ceased; the last low wave of sound Had died upon the ears of that great crowd That thronged the convent garden, when there rose A whisper which, wide-spreading, quickly gained In volume, and at length became a cry, Demanding that the artist whose rare skill Had wrought such sound in metal, straight be brought To hear the praise that was so justly...
