Forgotten Books, 2018. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Speech on Local Taxation Was paid every year in local burdens, or every five years they paid in local burdens the whole amount of the aggregate income of real property, and exactly one-eighth of its value in poor rate assessment alone; such exceptional exactions to which the owners of real property were subjected, were monstrous, intolerable, and almost incredible. He would now endeavour briefly to compare the amount raised by Local Taxation with the amount annually raised by Imperial Taxation. The estimate of Imperial Taxation for 1870 1 was 67, 000, 000. If you deducted from that amount 27, for the interest of the national debt, you had 40, for defraying the expenses of the army and navy, for the civil service, and for all the purposes of modern government. You had that of Imperial Taxation as against of Local Taxation. But the comparison did not end there. Imperial Taxation was simple, it was intelligible, it was annually decreasing, and was being annually revised. Local Taxation, on the contrary, was a Chaos. It was confusion confounded, was a sort of thing which, as Lord Dundreary would say, no fellow could understand. It was annually increasing, and the basis of it had not been altered for 300 years. The public at large had no reason whatever to complain of Imperial Taxation. It was said, and he believed it, that it was equitably imposed, systematically collected, and economically expended. The right hon. Gentleman the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who held the purse strings, was generally supposed to be a close-fisted gentleman, and he was responsible to the House and to the nation for Imperial Taxation. But Local Taxation was...
