At one end of this, there are some tablets, and close by a little temple. The shades of the evening had begun to fall, and we could not linger on this melancholy spot. It is situated about half a mile directly off eastward from the north-east corner of the city. From this place of the dead, we passed across the northeastern and the eastern parade grounds, homeward bound. As we came down a long street and were crossing the latter, a crowd of vagrants followed us; and when in the open field or parade gound, they shouted thrice and at the same time hurled showers of brickbats. These fell harmless. On our turning around, we saw several respectable men beckoning and warning them off from their evil doing. By this interference, with a few words to those...
