Excerpt from John Ashton, or the Emigrant I fear not, he said 3 indeed, it was a wish to see him before he dies, that made me come to England at the present time. The old man wrote to say he was very weak, and expressed a great desire to see me, and so I felt it my duty, in spite of the long voyage, to come over. You did right, John, I replied 3 happy would it be if all children would put themselves to inconvenience for the purpose of pleasing their parents. Alas! There is too little filial duty, or filial love, in the young around us. But be sure of this, that no man must expect any happiness from his own children, if he neglects to honour his own father and mother according to the com mandment. Your father, I hope, has recovered his late attack 1 Yes, sir, he is now much better, he says 3 and hopes in a day or two to get out of doors again.
