D: Late President of the Society He saw, and appreciated, and sympathized with us in all the difficulties under which we labored; and I believe if we had not had a man as wise, as kind, as faithful, as far-seeing as Professor Rogers was that this institution would never have reached the point of suc cess in which we rejoice today. He, of all men, was fitted by his mental and moral qualities to undertake the pilotage of a new insti tution like this in the stormy waters which it must perforce pass over before it reaches success. I have known Professor Rogers inti mately in personal acquaintance, for he made me his personal friend; I have visited him in his beautiful and happy home; and I can testify to every word that anyone can utter as to his warm-heartedness, and his excellence. In his character he was a man to be loved; in his studies and in his teaching he was a man to be imitated. He could not be satisfied until he had found the truth, and uttered it. He not only had that enthusiasm for science which made him a discoverer, he had that love of imparting it which made him a teacher. Add tothis that he was always in sympathy with the young. His warm heartedness went out to his pupils; and when we combine these quali ties, that admirable gift for scientific investigation which he had by nature, and that untiring pursuit of and love for truth, with his wonderful capacity as an expositor, and with his warm personal sym pathics, it seems to me we...
