GRIN Verlag Aug 2007, 2007. Taschenbuch. Book Condition: Neu. 210x148x2 mm. This item is printed on demand - Print on Demand Neuware - Essay from the year 2006 in the subject Politics - International Politics - Region: Far East, grade: Distinction - very good, King` s College London (Department of War Studies), course: Conflict, Security and Development, 23 entries in the bibliography, language: English, comment: It has now been almost half a decade since the fall of the Taliban and billions of dollars have been pledged for reconstruction. Judging from numerous indicators, Afghanistan should be on its way to be once again a 'functioning state' we will assess if this is really the case by considering socio-historical factors of Afghanistan's current situation, followed by a critical discussion of post-conflict reconstruction efforts as well as underlying structural problems undermining these efforts. , abstract: With the adoption of a new constitution in 2004, Afghanistan emerged anew as a member of the international community after decades of anti-Soviet jihad, interfactional and interethnic civil war, and wars of conquest and resistance by and against the radical-Islamic Taliban movement. While clearly every society emerging from armed conflict requires some degree of reconstruction, the needs of Afghanistan following allied intervention in 2001 have been by far beyond the ordinary after a quarter-century of armed conflict the country s entire social, political and economic infrastructure had been destroyed, while war left Afghanistan facing the worlds largest refugee population. It has now been almost half a decade since the fall of the Taliban and billions of dollars have been pledged for reconstruction by the international community. Judging from numerous indicators, it appears that Afghanistan is on its way to be once again a 'functioning state' we will critically assess if this is really the case by considering socio-historical factors...
