Above this was a granite cirque, quite bare to the eye save for a scattering buttercup or two and a little dry sedge of the preceding summer, where the disintegrated rock permitted and the ledge focused the sun. Two thirds of the way up the cirque, a fine view of mountain-peaks began to be opened. Reading them from left to right, they were Mt. King, Geneva, Thunder Mountain, Table Mountain, and Milestone, --a view very agreeable after honest toil, and, like approaching spring or other nice things in their beginning, which the imagination of each will readily suggest, perhaps as dear in retrospect as the more complete and always longed-for fulfillment. The snow, across which devastating summer winds had blown, was pitted as a human face by smallpox; elsewhere we saw it eroded into little waves, like a...
