Unless otherwise noted, production data are official usda estimates prepared by the Foreign Agricultural Service or official statistics of foreign governments. Where such published data are not available, estimates have been made by the Economic Research Service, and these are marked by an asterisk There is a general tendency for figures on agricultural production to be biased downward for many reasons. There is a similar tendency for estimates of the population to be too low, although cases are believed to exist of inflation in both production and population statistics. Statistics of international trade are usually adequate, although it has been necessary for some countries to supplement the official foreign trade statistics with figures relating to unreported imports.
