Excerpt: .turned out of the side aisles, and paused for a considerable time until this order was executed. Quiet having at length been restored, his Lordship turned again to those who were about being confirmed, and said that possibly they had not yet thought of the matter, and if so, they had better at once stand up and return home. None, however, did so, at which I thought the Bishop seemed displeased; and then I began speculating upon what would happen if he turned out all the candidates, and wondering how, after a long preparation by the Clergy, the offer he had made could be necessary; and so I lost the rest of his Lordship s discourse. The Dissenter winds up with some tolerably strong criticism upon the wholesale manner in which the Bishop laid hands upon those who were presented to him for the...
