"Almost all the foods meant for human consumption are perishable in nature. Most of the food items get deteriorated immediately after harvest which leads to loss in nutritive value as well as great economic loss. Therefore, knowledge of various processing and preservation methods helps to produce the best possible foods over a long period of time. Preservation of foods is a very practical approach to utilize the glut in the season and to make available the different processed and preserved products for the consumers in all 264 pp.
