FBC LTD, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Montana Wild Life, Vol. 2: The Official Publication of the State Fish and Game Commission; March, 1930 Divide and then known as the ceded strip, was probably the greatest hunting area in Montana. This area was a great mountain sheep and grizzly bear country and yearly sportsmen from New York and London availed themselves of these conditions and, guided by Jack Munroe, who still lives in Montana, always got their big horn and grizzly. Today under Park supervision this same area still abounds with wild life. The mountain sheep, wildest and shyest of them all, when this country became a park, has now through contact with man and having been hay fed at certain points during severe winters, become so tame that pictures of them are secured, although in remote parts of this park, where few ever travel, mountain sheep are apparently as shy and wild as ever. The first feeding of these sheep was not really from a point of necessity, but rather to tame by feeding and thus try to hold them close to a highway, where tourists could view them. This certainly has been accomplished, as any one who has visited this country can testify. During a fall visit to the park by Ernest Thompson Seton, well known author and naturalist, I was detailed to accompany Mr. Seton and remained with him for eight days. This was after the park season, and we camped close to the summit of the Continental Divide to be as close as possible to the mountain goat, for Mr. Seton was at this time making a study of the goat. During our stay many wild life stories were...
