A summary of this work is presented, together with a discussion of results as published in Bulletin 153. Summary: The only satisfactory method of judging the economy of rations is to consider together all the controlling factors entering into the feeding operation. No single factor is a true measure of the economy of a ration. The great number of factors involved in cattle feeding makes it impossible, in a limited space, to clearly discuss Purdue Exp. Sta, Bulletin, 136. them in their numerous and complex combinations. Therefore, the discussion of the trials as a complete transaction is presented, with such variable factor. s as weight and cos of cattle, cost of gains, selling price of cattle and profit or loss per steer as they occurred during the trial: In the above summary, the...
