Excerpt: . his agency bills until payment had been made by the client. There was difficulty in obtaining payment from the client, but after litigation lasting eleven years the bill of costs was paid with a considerable sum for interest. The London agent claimed to participate in the interest. Held, by the Court of Appeal, that the usual agency terms being that the agent should be repaid his disbursements and receive, not half the profits, but half the profit charges, whether they were paid by the client or not, he was entitled to nothing more, and could not claim to participate in the interest; for that, although his suspending his right to payment would have made a stipulation for interest reasonable, the Court could not import such a stipulation. Ward v. Lawson, 43 Ch.D. 353 (1889). 329 A country solicitor is a client of his London agent within the meaning of a covenant by an articled clerk not to transact business with clients of his master's firm. *Ward v.
